The source, who declined to be named because the information was confidential, said the conversation took place just before Cohen was sentenced to serve three years in prison. Cohen's comments came during a conversation about the overall criminal case involving Manafort and the President's dealings with Russia, the source said. Cohen's comments about the overall case took place before Cohen entered into a plea deal with federal prosecutors on a single charge of bank fraud and a single charge of making an excessive campaign contribution, the source said. Manafort, who once ran Trump's 2016 presidential campaign, was convicted in a Virginia federal court in August 2018 of conspiracy and other charges stemming from his activities on behalf of a pro-Russia political party in Ukraine. Viganò said these allegations were 'corroborated' by five unnamed American Catholic cardinals. He also revealed that the pontiff's successor, Pope Francis, "admits having known about the abuse" and that he "ordered Benedict XVI to resign." These revelations were reported in a news article published by the Italian newspaper L'Espresso on August 25.
